South-Carolina THE GAZETTE

[Numb. 964.]

The Animosities between the Jesuits and Janseniſts in France, which have been carried to great Lengths, as they have excited the Curioſity of the Public, are become a frequent Subject of Converſation here; but, as this Paper has not hitherto made any Mention of them, the Diſpute between the two Sects ſeems to be ſo little known, that ſome have affirm'd it to be, whether the French King is ſupreme Head of the Gallican Church; others, that it aroſe from the late Tax on the Revenues of Eccleſiaſtics; and ſome, that it was produced by a Bull, called Unigenitus; the following Summary, therefore, will probably contribute to the Inſtruction and Entertainment of our Readers.

From the Gentleman's Magazine for May 1752.

CORNELIUS JANSEN was a native of Leerdam in Holland, and biſhop of Ypres in the beginning of the 17th century; he wrote a commentary on the works of St. Auguſtine, in which he advanced ſome doctrines concerning election, reprobation, and irreſiſtible grace, which were deem'd heretical and controverted by the Jeſuits, who profeſſed theſe doctrines as explained by Molinia; two parties were therefore ſoon diſtinguiſhed by the names of Janſeniſts and Molinaſts, who oppoſed each other with all the bitterneſs of religious zeal.

Between the years 1690 and 1 00, father Queſnel, an eccleſiaſtic of France, tranſlated the new teſtament into the French language, and wrote a comment upon every verſe, in which the doctrines of Janſen were maintained and enforced, and the right of the laity to read the ſcriptures was aſſerted; this book the Jeſuits perceived came into many hands, and was eagerly read; they therefore procured it to be condemned by the papal authority; but the ſale and uſe of this book not being yet effectually reſtrained, in the year 1713, 101 propoſitions were ſelected from it, and after a ſolemn examination were declared, by a bull of Pope Clement XI. beginning with the word Unigenitus, to be falſe, captious, miſſounding, offenſive to pious ears, ſcandalous, pernicious, raſh, injurious to the church in its practice, ſeditious, blaſphemous, & heretical.

But the Janſeniſts being ſtill the more numerous ſect, the Bull Unigenitus was never generally received, and Queſnel's book was ſtill read proved orthodoxy, that his hymns for the new breviary had been daily ſung in the churches of the dioceſe of Paris above 15 years, being dangerouſly ſick, ſent for the curate of St Stephen du Mont, his paſtor, to adminiſter to him the laſt ſacraments; but this the curate abſolutely refuſed, upon pretence that he was a Janſeniſt, and he died without them. This affair made a great noiſe at that time, but ill conſequences were prevented by the prudence of the government.

Some time after, M. Cauſſin, counſellor of the chatelet, and nephew to the deceaſed, being alſo dangerouſly ill, ſent for the ſame curate to adminiſter the ſacraments to him, who, inſtead of complying, declared that he would do nothing for him unleſs he produced a confeſſion of his faith, properly certified, and named his confeſſor. Of this the friends of M. Cauſſin complained to the parliament; the curate was ſummoned, and being interrogated concerning the reaſons of his refuſal and demand, anſwered, that he did not think himſelf accountable to the parliament for his conduct in ſpirituals and that none but the archbiſhop of Paris had a right to demand the reaſons upon which he had acted: For this anſwer, which was deemed contemptuous, the parliament impriſoned him, and next day ſent a deputation to the archbiſhop of Paris, to enquire if it was by his approbation that the curate had refuſed the ſacraments to the dying man? the biſhop anſwered, that according to an eſtabliſhed cuſtom the ſacraments could not be adminiſtered without firſt producing a note of confeſſion, and that M. Cauſſin was bound to conform to that rule before he could receive them.

The parliament well knew that this cuſtom was merely a pretence, and perceived that the biſhop approved of what the curate had done; but the queſtion which originally was only whether the curate had done his duty in refuſing the ſacrament to a dying perſon, was now become complicated with another, whether, if he had not done his duty, he was accountable to the parliament or to the biſhop? The parliament therefore reſolved nem. con. that ſuch members as were of the king's council, ſhould inform him of the ſcandal raiſed by refuſing the ſacraments to M. Cauſſin, and of the inſult offered to the royal authority, by the curate's appeal to the biſhop. The king, who found himſelf much embarraſſed, returned an anſwer, in which, though he ſeems to condemn the curate for refuſing the ſacrament, he ſtrongly wiſhes the parliament had proceeded with leſs ſeverity; he cenſemns the impriſonment of the curate, and declares that he will always preſerve the public peace, the reſpect due to religion, and a legal ſubordination to the miniſters of the church.

This anſwer produced a pathetic remonſtrance, in which the parliament obſerves, that though the church has an unqueſtioned and independent right to determine all matters of faith and of diſcipline in ſpirituals, yet the power to enforce the laws of the church in his majeſty's dominions belongs only to his majeſty, or to thoſe to whom he has delegated his authority; that they, who are intruſted with this authority have been ſo far from exerciſing it to infringe the rights of the church, that they have eſtabliſhed them, by bringing to her aſſiſtance a power which enables her to carry thoſe laws which ſhe has ordained into execution: And that there being no law of the church by which a certificate of confeſſion and the naming the confeſſor are made neceſſary conditions of an admiſſion to the ſacraments, ſuch of the clergy who refuſe the ſacraments, but upon theſe conditions, act illegally, and ought to be compelled by the civil power to return to their duty.

To this remonſtrance the king made no other reply, than that he would order the affair to be examined by his council In the mean time M. Cauſſin died, and ſeveral eccleſiaſtics followed the curate of St. Stephen's example.

From the Gentleman's Magazine for June 1752.

The death of M. Cauſſin, and the king's anſwer to the remonſtrance ſuſpended the proſecution commenced againſt the curate of St. Stephen; but about the middle of March laſt he was ſent for to adminiſter the laſt ſacraments to the abbé le Mere, and abſolutely refuſed it on pretence of Janſeniſm. The parliament being appealed to, ordered the curate into cuſtody, and preſſed the archbiſhop of Paris to cauſe the ſacraments to be adminiſtered to the dying man. The archbiſhop not thinking it prudent to diſpute the authority of parliament on ſo unpopular a point, diſpatched father Duſquin, a capuchin, to perform the ceremony; but at the ſame time protected Rocton in his place. Before father Duſquin arrived, the abbé le Mere became incapable of receiving the ſacraments, and died without them, and the affair being reported abroad a prodigious concourſe of people attended his funeral, and the general diſcontent increaſed.

On the 16th of April, all the chambers of parliament aſſembled to deliberate on the affair, and received freſh complaints, from divers provinces of the kingdom, of the like behaviour in their clergy; upon which they cauſed an arret to be fixed up in all public places, enjoining the clergy in general to conform to the adminiſtration of the ſacraments according to the canons of the kingdom, and forbidding them, under ſevere penalties, to uſe in their ſermons the terms novators, heretics, jeſuitics, Janſeniſts, Semipelagians, or other party diſtinctions.

In conſequence of this order, and [illegible] get of ſtarting ſchiſm to be introduced; that he had always made it the rule of his conduct to quiet diſturbed minds; that he had puniſhed ſeveral of the clergy who had refuſed the ſacraments, and had taken meaſures to remove Boſton from the cure of St. Stephen, where he was diſagreeable: that he had renewed every order to impoſe ſilence upon the diſputes which ſome people had again endeavoured to revive; and that it was never his intention to take from his parliament the cognizance of this affair; but that he expected all proſecutions on this ſubject ſhould ſtop, and that the parliament ſhould return to the exerciſe of their ordinary functions.' Beſides theſe favourable conceſſions, the king being informed that the archbiſhop of Paris held, at his palace, frequent meetings of the clergy, he ordered that ſuch meetings ſhould be diſcontinued, and that a mandate, which was in the preſs, ſhould be ſuppreſſed, and out of ſix copies that had got abroad five were recovered and burnt. On the other hand, the king publiſhed an arret, declaring the bull Unigenitus a law of the church, and a law of the kingdom, and as ſuch, requiring all his ſubjects to pay that regard and ſubmiſſion to it which is due to the judgment of the church in matters of faith.

While his majeſty was thus acting as mediator, the archbiſhop of Paris, on the third of May, preſented a memorial to parliament, ſigned by 22 miniſters of Paris, proteſting that they would refuſe the ſacrament to all thoſe who ſhould not preſent a certificate of confeſſion. The parliament having ſent for theſe miniſters to know from what motives they had been induced to ſign that declaration, ſix who appeared charged the miniſter of St. John de Greve with having influenced them, who was immediately ordered to be taken into cuſtody. The king being informed of this ſent for the parliament, and having received from them an account of their proceedings, he ſent them the following meſſage on the fourth: I have examined the information which you brought me; I do not intend that this affair ſhall be purſued; I impoſe ſilence on my ſolicitor general, and I forbid my parliament from continuing their proſecution againſt the miniſter of St. John de Greve, which I will ſhall remain of no effect. This being reported, the parliament reſolved, that all other buſineſs ſhould be laid aſide, and that a ſtrong remonſtrance ſhould next day be preſented to his majeſty, in which they declare, 'that the ſchiſm raiſed, and in defiance of which the archbiſhop of Paris dares to act openly, is moſt fatal to religion, the ſtate, and the ſovereign authority; that under ſuch nice and critical circumſtances, it ſhould ſeem as if the king would, by his authority, act contrary to the judicial order, and invalidate the arrets of the firſt tribunal of his ſovereign juſtice, which would prove the moſt fatal blow to the conſtitution, and moſt injurious precedent againſt his intereſt and that of public; that the fidelity which they owe to the king, the love they bear his perſon, the duty of their employment, and their regard for the welfare of the ſtate, permit them not to ſuffer the progreſs of ſo fatal an evil; that their conſciences oblige them to act; and if the king perſiſts in annulling or ſuſpending what his parliament ſhall do with reſpect to freſh facts tending to ſchiſm, they moſt humbly beſeech him to excuſe them from continuing the functions of their office, in the exerciſe of which they would have cauſe to reproach themſelves with having betrayed their truſt.'

The king's council having been at Marly to know when a deputation from the parliament might be permitted to wait on his majeſty with this remonſtrance, were refuſed audience, and given to underſtand that the king would hear nothing from his parliament, nor receive any deputation from them till they reſumed their functions. This anſwer being reported, reſolved by the parliament, that the king's council ſhall be directed to wait upon the king, to intreat his majeſty to conſider, that the intention of his parliament was not, by ſuſpending their uſual application to buſineſs, to quit their functions, the exerciſe of which they regard as one of the principal parts of their duty; but that this duty, important as it is, may ſometimes give way to other ſtill more important, and that the ſubject of the remonſtrance does not permit them to give attention to any other, as nothing leſs than the whole conſtitution of church and ſtate are at ſtake in it. The king's council having immediately waited on his majeſty, received this anſwer: Tell juſtice be done to my ſubjects, I ſhall liſten to nothing from my parliament. In conſequence of this peremptory meſſage, the parliament reſumed their functions, and the king appointed the Sunday following to give them audience.

From the Gentleman's Magazine for July 1752.

When the king gave audience to his parliament he declared that he was well ſatisfied with their obedience, that he ſhould always liſten to their remonſtrances with pleaſure, and rejoice in doing juſtice to his people. His majeſty ſoon afterwards nominated Cardinal Tencin, the archbiſhop of Paris, the archbiſhop of Sens, the biſhop of Pons, and the ancient biſhop of Mirepoix, on behalf of the clergy; and the chancellor and firſt preſident of the chamber of accounts on behalf of the laity, as commiſſioners for determining all queſtions that may ariſe in the preſent diſpute; the archbiſhops and biſhops, when the chancellor and preſident of accounts were nominated, rejected, and his majeſty having rejected the eccleſiaſtics, who had made a repreſentation againſt the joining lay magiſtrates with them in the commiſſion, finally appointed the Cardinal Rochefoucault, cardinal de Soubiſe, the biſhop of Laon; jointly with Meſſ. de Trudant, de la Grandville, and the late Attorney General.

As ſoon as this appointment was known, the biſhops preſented a memorial to the king, ſigned by 20 of their body, in which they except againſt all ſecular judges in eccleſiaſtical affairs, and implore his majeſty's authority to procure them juſtice from the parliament. At the ſame time warrants and proceedings againſt ſeveral other of the clergy who had refuſed the ſacrament were preſented to the king by his council for his approbation: among others was the ſentence of parliament againſt the curate of Troyes in Champaign, who, after having often refuſed the ſacrament to two young ladies, at length adminiſter'd it, declaring, that he gave it to them as our Lord himſelf gave it to Judas; he was condemn'd to pay 3000 livres damages to the ladies, 100 livres to the poor, and to make amende honorable in the grand chamber of the parliament. The archbiſhop of Paris was not, however, diſcouraged, but oppoſed the parliament with yet greater zeal, and more provoking ſeverity; for a Jew having complained of the curate of St. Sulpice for refuſing to baptiſe him, to the Attorney General; and the curate being ſummoned to attend the parliament, he carried the ſummons to the archbiſhop, who cauſed the officers to be arreſted, and ſent to the Baſtile.

The queſtion put by the eccleſiaſtics to perſons deſirous to receive the Sacrament, is, Whether they receive the Bull Unigenitus? the parliament, therefore, that the diſpute may be brought to a ſhort iſſue, have propoſed this queſtion to be determined by a national council, *Whether the Bull is a Rule of Faith? Reſolving that if it ſhall be determined in the affirmative, they will conform to it; but, if in the negative, they will continue to proſecute with the utmoſt ſeverity all eccleſiaſtics who ſhall aſſume a power of preſcribing conditions upon which the ſacraments of the church ſhall be adminiſtered. What will ultimately be the effect of this reſolution cannot certainly be known; but ſoon after it was paſſed, the king having been made acquainted with ſome indirect methods which had been taken by the biſhop of Amiens to procure Lettres de Cachet againſt thoſe who executed the arrets of parliament in his dioceſe, expreſſed the higheſt diſpleaſure, and ordered thoſe Lettres to be immediately ſuperſeded. The archbiſhop of Paris, who commanded the officers of parliament to

* The bull in the courſe of this diſpute has been declared by the king to be a law of the church, and a law of the kingdom; but it may operate as both, without being conſidered as a rule of faith, and the criterion of a right to receive theſe ſacraments; it is poſſible too that the national council and his majeſty might be of different opinions.

the Baſtile, is baniſh'd to his country ſeat at Conflans. The king has approved the conduct of parliament with reſpect to ſeveral eccleſiaſtics whom they have lately taken into cuſtody, and has ſignified to them that they are at liberty to continue their proſecutions. The old curate of St. Stephen du Mont having written to the Pope an account of his diſgrace, applied to himſelf a paſſage of ſcripture, in which it is ſaid of the Jews, that they ſhall be Wanderers and Fugitives; the king therefore, to remove the foundation of this complaint, has given him a fix'd habitation in the dungeon of the caſtle of St. Florentin.

A work is ſaid to be in the preſs at Paris, containing a new explanation of the cauſes of electricity, in which the author undertakes to ſhew, that the principal phenomena were long ago obſerved and recorded; that the electrical matter is compoſed of ſulphur and nitre, the former producing the flame, and the latter the crackling noiſe; and that there is a very great affinity between electricity and ſome kinds of phoſphori. In the treating this ſubject he has hinted, that he ſhall give ſome experiments more deciſive, as well as more extraordinary, than any hitherto publiſhed.

London, September 23. By letters from fort St. David's, dated the 27th of February laſt, and brought by the Warwick Indiaman, there is advice, that Capt. That the Engliſh under Lingan had drove the French from before Trichinapalli. That two Nabobs in the French intereſt, had come over to the Engliſh with a great number of men, and the French in their turn were ſurrounded; ſo that it is doubted but the firſt ſhip from thoſe parts will bring an account of their having ſurrendered, as they were in great diſtreſs for want of proviſions. Theſe letters add, that M. Dupleix had ſent propoſals to the Engliſh for an accommodation, a preamble of which he ſet forth, that he had only ſucceeded the Indians that ſued to him for aſſiſtance, and hoped that every thing would be ſettled to the mutual ſatisfaction and advantage of the two companies, and that all animoſities and hoſtilities would ceaſe.
